NEW QUESTION: 3An application uses Amazon Cognito to manage end users' permissions when directly accessing AWS resources, including Amazon DynamoDB. A new feature request reads as follows:Provide a mechanism to mark customers as suspended pending investigation or suspended permanently. Customers should still be able to log in when suspended, but should not be able to make changes.The priorities are to reduce complexity and avoid potential for future security issues.Which approach will meet these requirements and priorities?A. Move suspended customers to a second Cognito group and define an appropriate IAM access policy for the group.B. Use Amazon Cognito Sync to push out a "suspension_status" parameter and split the IAM policy into normal users and suspended users.C. Add suspended customers to second Cognito user pool and update the application login flow to check both user pools.D. Create a new database field "suspended_status" and modify the application logic to validate that field when processing requests.Answer: A*Explanation:

NEW QUESTION: 4 In SSL/TLS protocol, what kind of authentication is supported?
A. Server authentication (mandatory) and client authentication (optional)
B. Role based authentication scheme
C. Peer-to-peer authentication
D. Only server authentication (optional)
Answer: A
Explanation: "The server sends a message back to the client indicating that a secure session needs to be established, and the client sends it security parameters. The server compares those security parameters to its own until it finds a match. This is the handshaking phase. The server authenticates to the client by sending it a digital certificate, and if the client decides to trust the server the process continues. The server can require the client to send over a digital certificate for mutual authentication, but that is rare." Pg. 523 Shon Harris: All-In-One CISSP Certification Exam Guide
