NEW QUESTION: 1A. Option DB. Option CC. Option AD. Option BAnswer: B*Explanation:
ExplanationWhen the user creates a new EBS volume or restores a volume from the snapshot, the back-end storage blocks are immediately allocated to the user EBS. However, the first time when the user is trying to access a block of the storage, it is recommended to either be wiped from the new volumes or instantiated from the snapshot (for restored volumes. before the user can access the block. This preliminary action takes time and can cause a 5 to50 percent loss of IOPS for the volume when the block is accessed for the first time. To avoid this it is required to pre warm the volume. Pre-warming an EBS volume on a Linux instance requires that the user should unmount the blank device first and then write all the blocks on the device using a command, such as"dd".

NEW QUESTION: 3You have a DNS server named Server1.Server1 has a primary zone named contoso.com. Zone Aging/Scavenging is configured for the contoso.com zone. One month ago, an administrator removed a server named Server2 from the network. You discover that a static resource record for Server2 is present in contoso.com. Resource records for decommissioned client computers are removed automatically from contoso.com. You need to ensure that the static resource records for all of the servers are removed automatically from contoso.com. What should you modify?

A. The Record time stamp value of the static resource records
B. The time-to-live (TTL) value of the static resource records
C. The Security settings of the static resource records
D. The Expires after value of contoso.com

Answer: A

Explanation/Reference: Explanation: Reset and permit them to use a current (non-zero) time stamp value. This enables these records to become aged and scavenged. You can use this procedure to change how a specific resource record is scavenged. A stale record is a record where both the No-Refresh Interval and Refresh Interval have passed without the time stamp updating. DNS->View->Advanced Depending on the how the resource record was originally added to the zone, do one of the following: If the record was added dynamically using dynamic update, clear the Delete this record when it becomes stale check box to prevent its aging or potential removal during the scavenging process. If dynamic updates to this record continue to occur, the Domain Name System (DNS) server will always reset this check box so that the dynamically updated record can be deleted. If you added the record statically, select the Delete this record when it becomes stale check box to permit its aging or potential removal during the scavenging process. Typically, stale DNS records occur when a computer is permanently removed from the network. Mobile users who abnormally disconnect from the network can also cause stale DNS records. To help manage stale records, Windows adds a time stamp to dynamically added resource records in primary zones where aging and scavenging are enabled. Manually added records are time stamped with a value of 0, and they are automatically excluded from the aging and scavenging process. To enable aging and scavenging, you must do the following: Resource records must be either dynamically added to zones or manually modified to be used in aging and scavenging operations. Scavenging and aging must be enabled both at the DNS server and on the zone. Scavenging is disabled by default. DNS scavenging depends on the following two settings: No-refresh interval: The time between the most recent refresh of a record time stamp and the moment when the time stamp can be refreshed again. When scavenging is enabled, this is set to 7 days by default. Refresh interval: The time between the earliest moment when a record time stamp can be refreshed and the earliest moment when the record can be scavenged. The refresh interval must be longer than the maximum record refresh period. When scavenging is enabled, this is set to 7 days by default. A DNS record becomes eligible for scavenging after both the no-refresh and refresh intervals have elapsed. If the default values are used, this is a total of 14 days. References:

NEW QUESTION: 4 You have a SQL Server database named DB1. You plan to load 10 million rows to DB1 by running bcp.exe. You need to modify DB1 to minimize the amount of space required to store the transaction logs during the load operation. The solution must ensure that you can perform a point-in-time restore. What data base setting should you modify?

A. Compatibility level to 120
B. Recovery model to Bulk logged
C. Containment type to Partial
D. Recovery model to Simple

Answer: C

Explanation: A contained database is a database that is isolated from other databases and from the instance of SQL Server that hosts the database.
