NEW QUESTION: 3Which of the following Orange Book ratings represents the highest level of trust?A. C2B. B2C. B1D. F6Answer: B*Explanation:Trusted Computer System Evaluation Criteria First published in 1983 and updated in 1985, the TCSEC, frequently referred to as the Orange Book, was a United States Government Department of Defense (DoD) standard that sets basic standards for the implementation of security protections in computing systems. Primarily intended to help the DoD find products that met those basic standards, TCSEC was used to evaluate, classify, and select computer systems being considered for the processing, storage, and retrieval of sensitive or classified information on military and government systems. As such, it was strongly focused on enforcing confidentiality with no focus on other aspects of security such as integrity or availability. Although it has since been superseded by the common criteria, it influenced the development of other product evaluation criteria, and some of its basic approach and terminology continues to be used. The trust levels run from D (lowest) to A (highest). Within each level, a number can indicate differing requirements with higher numbers indicating a higher level of trust. The order from the least secure to the most secure is: D, C1, C2, B1, B2, B3, A1. See the one page resume at the link provided below. B1 is incorrect. The trust levels runs from D (lowest) to A (highest). Within each level, a number can indicate differing requirements with higher numbers indicating a higher level of trust. F6 is incorrect. The Orange Book only defines levels A - D and there is no level F. C2 is incorrect. The trust levels runs from D (lowest) to A (highest). Within each level, a number can indicate differing requirements with higher numbers indicating a higher level of trust. See our one page diagram on the TCSEC at: Reference(s) used for this question: Hernandez CISSP, Steven (2012-12-21).
