NEW QUESTION: 1---Your network contains an Active Directory domain. The domain contains 10 domain controllers that run Windows Server 2008 R2. You need to monitor the following information on the domain controllers during the next five days: Memory usage Processor usage The number of LDAP queries What should you do? A. Use the Active Directory Diagnostics Data Collector Set (DCS). B. Create a User Defined Data Collector Set (DCS) that uses the Active Directory Diagnostics template. C. Use the System Performance Data Collector Set (DCS). D. Create a User Defined Data Collector Set (DCS) that uses the System Performance template. Answer: B Explanation: The System Performance Data Collector Set/System Performance template does not monitor Active Directory data (we need the number of LDAP queries). That leaves out answers B ("Use the System Performance Data Collector Set (DCS)") and C ("Create a User Defined Data Collector Set (DCS) that uses the System Performance template"). Because the Active Directory Diagnostics Data Collector Set (DCS) runs only for 5 minutes and we need to monitor for 5 days we have to use a User Defined Data Collector Set (DCS) that uses the Active Directory Diagnostics template. For a User Defined Data Collector Set we can set the monitoring duration in seconds, minutes, hours, days or weeks. So we have to create a User Defined Data Collector Set (DCS) that uses the Active Directory Diagnostics template. Reference: <http://blogs.technet.com/b/askds/archive/2010/06/08/son-of-spa-ad-data-collector-sets-in-win-2008-andbeyond.aspx> AD Data Collector Sets in Win2008 and beyond The Active Directory Diagnostics data collector set runs for a default of 5 minutes. This duration period cannot be modified for the built-in collector. However, the collection can be stopped manually by clicking the Stop button or from the command line. If reducing or increasing the time that a data collector set runs is required, and manually stopping the collection is not desirable, then see How to Create a User Defined Data Collection Set.
