NEW QUESTION: 1 Whatney Co. is considering the acquisition of a new, more efficient press. The cost of the press is \$360,000, and the press has an estimated six-year life with zero salvage value. Whatney uses straight-line depreciation for both financial reporting and income tax reporting purposes and has a 40 percent corporate income tax rate. In evaluating equipment acquisitions of this type, Whatney uses a goal of a four-year payback period. To meet Whatney's desired payback period, the press must produce a minimum annual before-tax, operating cash savings of: A. \$90,000 B. \$114,000 C. \$110,000 D. \$150,000 Answer: C Explanation: Choice "b" is correct. \$110,000 minimum annual before-tax operating cash savings. Step 1: Determine the after-tax annual cash savings. The question provides the cash outflow and the desired payback period (which is calculated using after-tax cash flows). The \$90,000 annual after-tax cash flows is calculated as follows: Step 2: Determine the amount of the annual depreciation expense. Because the question asks for annual before-tax cash savings, we will need to convert the \$90,000 after-tax cash savings we calculated in Step 1, above, to a before-tax amount. The depreciation tax shield plays a role in the after-tax cash flows, so the annual depreciation of \$60,000 must be calculated, as follows: Step 3: Use algebra to determine the before-tax cash savings. Before-tax cash savings is equal to the after-tax cash savings plus the taxes paid. So: Let $B = \text{annual before-tax operating cash savings}$ $\$90,000 \text{ after tax cash savings} + [(B - \$60,000) \text{ depreciation expense}] \cdot (.40 \text{ tax rate}) = B - \$90,000 + [(B - \$60,000) \cdot (.40)] = B - \$90,000 + [.40B - \$24,000] = B - \$114,000 = .60B - \$66,000 = .60B - \$110,000 = B = \text{annual before-tax operating cash savings}$
