NEW QUESTION: 1A. Option AB. Option CC. Option DD. Option BE. Option EAnswer: A,B,D
Explanation:A:The way to allow two or more statements to be grouped into a transaction is to disable the auto-commitmode. After the auto-commit mode is disabled, no SQL statements are committed until you call the methodcommit explicitly. All statements executed after the previous call to the method commit are included in thecurrent transaction and committed together as a unit. Note:When a connection is created, it is in auto-commit mode. This means that each individual SQL statementis treated as a transaction and is automatically committed right after it is executed. (To be more precise, thedefault is for a SQL statement to be committed when it is completed, not when it is executed. A statement iscompleted when all of its result sets and update counts have been retrieved. In almost all cases, however, astatement is completed, and therefore committed, right after it is executed.)B:The method Connection.setSavepoint, sets a Savepoint object within the current transaction. The Connection.rollback method is overloaded to take a Savepoint argument. When a transaction is rolled back toa savepoint all changes made after that savepoint are undone.C: calling the method rollback terminates a transaction and returns any values that were modified to theirprevious values. If you are trying to execute one or more statements in a transaction and get a SQLException, call the method rollback to end the transaction and start the transaction all over again.
