NEW QUESTION: 4 One of your engineers has written a web application in the Go Programming language and has asked your DevOps team to deploy it to AWS. The application code is hosted on a Git repository. What are your options? (Select Two)

A. Write a Dockerfile that installs the Go base image and uses Git to fetch your application. Create a new AWS OpsWorks stack that contains a Docker layer that uses the `Dockerfile` to deploy your container and then use the `Dockerfile` to automate the deployment.

B. Create a new AWS Elastic Beanstalk application and configure a Go environment to host your application. Using Git check out the latest version of the code, once the local repository for Elastic Beanstalk is configured use `eb create` command to create an environment and then use `eb deploy` command to deploy the application.

C. Write a Dockerfile that installs the Go base image and fetches your application using Git. Create a new AWS Elastic Beanstalk application and use this Dockerfile to automate the deployment.

D. Write a Dockerfile that installs the Go base image and fetches your application using Git. Create an AWS CloudFormation template that creates and associates an `AWS::EC2::Instance` resource type with an `AWS::EC2::Container` resource type.

Answer: B, C

Explanation: OpsWorks works with Chef recipes and not with Docker containers so Option B and C are invalid. There is no `AWS::EC2::Container` resource for CloudFormation so Option D is invalid. Below is the documentation on Elastic Beanstalk and Docker. Elastic Beanstalk supports the deployment of web applications from Docker containers. With Docker containers, you can define your own runtime environment. You can choose your own platform, programming language, and any application dependencies (such as package managers or tools), that aren't supported by other platforms. Docker containers are self-contained and include all the configuration information and software your web application requires to run.
