NEW QUESTION: 3 A major justification for investments in computer-integrated manufacturing (CIM) projects is:
A. Increased working capital.
B. Stabilization of market share.
C. Reduction in the costs of spoilage, reworked units, and scrap.
D. Lower carrying amount and depreciation expense for factory equipment.
Answer: C
Explanation: Automating and computerizing production processes requires a substantial investment in fixed assets and an increase in risk because of greater fixed costs. CIM also necessitates an increase in software costs and extensive worker retraining. However, the costs of spoilage, rework, and scrap are reduced along with labor costs. The qualitative advantages of CIM are increased flexibility, shorter manufacturing lead time, quicker development of new products, better product delivery and service, faster response to market changes, and improved competitiveness.
