NEW QUESTION: 2Refer to the exhibits. Router B should advertise the network connected to the E0/0/0 interface to router A and block all other network advertisements. The IP routing table on router A indicates that it is not receiving this prefix from router B. What is the probable cause of the problem?

A. An access list on router B is causing the 192.168.3.16/28 network to be denied.

B. An access list on router B is causing the 192.168.3.32/28 network to be denied.

C. The distribute list on router B is referencing the wrong interface.

D. The distribute list on router B is referencing a numbered access list that does not exist on router

Answer: A

Explanation: Explanation This is an unclear question. The question says "Router B should advertise the network connected to the E0/0/0 interface to router A and block all other network advertisements. The IP routing table on router A indicates that it is not receiving this prefix from router B." That means the network 192.168.3.16/28 (including the IP 192.168.3.21/28) is not received on router A -> A is the most suitable answer. Note: Distribute list are used to filter routing updates and they are based on access lists.

NEW QUESTION: 3 A company uses a bank to process its weekly payroll. Time sheets and payroll adjustment forms (e.g., hourly rate changes, terminations) are completed and delivered to the bank, which prepares checks (cheques) and reports for distribution. To BEST ensure payroll data accuracy:
A. payroll reports should be compared to input forms.
B. checks (cheques) should be compared to input forms.
C. checks (cheques) should be reconciled with output reports.
D. gross payroll should be recalculated manually.
Answer: A
Explanation/Reference: Explanation: The best way to confirm data accuracy, when input is provided by the company and output is generated by the bank, is to verify the data input (input forms) with the results of the payroll reports. Hence, comparing payroll reports with input forms is the best mechanism of verifying data accuracy. Recalculating gross payroll manually would only verify whether the processing is correct and not the data accuracy of inputs. Comparing checks (cheques) to input forms is not feasible as checks (cheques) have the processed information and input forms have the input data. Reconciling checks (cheques) with output reports only confirms that checks (cheques) have been issued as per output reports.
