NEW QUESTION: 3 A mother called the physician's office to ask if it would help relieve her small daughter's abdominal pain if she gave an enema and placed a heating pad on the abdomen. Her daughter has a fever and has vomited twice. The nurse's response is based on the knowledge that: A. Heat would help to relax the abdominal muscles and relieve her pain B. Complaints of stomach ache are common in young children and are generally best ignored C. The symptoms could easily have been caused by constipation, which an enema would relieve D. Both heat and enemas stimulate intestinal motility and could increase the risk of perforation

Answer: D Explanation: Explanation (A) Constipation does not cause fever or vomiting but may cause anorexia. Risk of perforation outweighs the possible benefits of an enema. (B) Heat will not relieve her symptoms but will increase intestinal motility and increase the risk of perforation. (C) Heat and enemas are contraindicated where severe abdominal pain is suspected because they increase intestinal motility and the risk of perforation. (D) Complaints accompanied by physical symptoms such as pain, anorexia, and fever should never be ignored.
