NEW QUESTION: 2Which of the following encryption protocols is the most secure?A. 4DES*B. AES*C. 3DES*D. DES*Answer: B

NEW QUESTION: 3Which three statements are true about the Resource Directory in Oracle Sales Cloud?(Choose three.)A. This is where a sales person can view the complete reporting hierarchy.B. This is where sales resources can view all associated data (opportunity, lead, and customers).C. It provides information about sales resources, their organizations, teams, and roles.D. This is where administrators can manage information about all resources, resource organizations, and teams.E. This is where sales persons and sales managers can manage information about all resources, resource organizations, and teams.Answer: C,D,E

NEW QUESTION: 4What is an important factor affecting the time required to perpetrate a manual trial and error attack to gain access to a target computer system?A. Keyspace for the password.B. Expertise of the person performing the attack.C. Encryption algorithm used for password transfer.D. Processing speed of the system executing the attack.Answer: A*Explanation:I am not sure of the answer on this question. B seems good but the reference below states that Keyspace (or length of password) is the main deterrent. I did not come across something that directly relates in my readings. "If an attacker mounts a trial-and-error attack against your password, a longer password gives the attacker a larger number of alternatives to try. If each character in the password may take on 96 different values (typical of printable ASCII characters) then each additional character presents the attacker with 96 times as many passwords to try. If the number of alternatives is large enough, the trial-and-error attack might discourage the attacker, or lead to the attacker's detection."
