NEW QUESTION: 2 Your network contains a computer named Computer1 that runs Windows 7. You need to verify if Computer1 has active DirectAccess connections to the network. What should you do? A. From Windows Firewall with Advanced Security, click Monitoring, and then click Connection Security Rules. B. From Network Connections, select the active network connection, and then click Diagnose this connection. C. From Network Connections, right-click the active network connection, and then click Status. D. From Windows Firewall with Advanced Security, click Monitoring, click Security Associations, and then click Main Mode. Answer: D
Explanation: DirectAccess uses IPSEC for encryption and authentication. In Server 2008, IPSEC is managed through Windows Firewall with Advanced Security. Main Mode negotiation is used to establish secure channels, so this is the area of WFAS we need to check to be sure the connection is active and working. WRONG ANSWERS Connection Security Rules are applied before machines can communicate and secure information. Monitoring this information would not let us see if the connection is active. Viewing the status of the active network connection will only provide us information about Computer1's adapter, and will not report any information about the DirectAccess connection. 'Diagnose this connection' is used to fix a broken connection by performing a series of common troubleshooting steps for resetting connections. We do not have any indication that a connection is broken here, we just need to verify DA is working (which assumes the network adapter is working)
