NEW QUESTION: 3You work in a company which is named Wiikigo Corp. The company uses SQL Server 2008. You are the administrator of the company database. Now you are in charge of a SQL Server 2008 instance. On two cluster-ready nodes, you intend to perform installation of a SQL Server 2008 mission-critical cluster. Constant availability is needed by the mission-critical cluster. You have to configure the SQL Server cluster to failover and reduce the service disruption to the least. Which failover option should you use?A. You should allow failback only during non-business hoursB. You should allow failback only during business hoursC. You should prevent automatic failbackD. You should immediately allow failbackAnswer: C
Explanation:Failover/Failback StrategiesAn overall cluster failover/failback policy is recommended. Failovers can be controlled in terms of a threshold, meaning that after a certain point, a resource will not be failed over. There are two levels of thresholds: resource and cluster. Depending on how the resource is configured, it can affect the group failing over to another node. In the event of a failover, the cluster group containing the SQL Server resources can be configured to fail back to the primary node when and if it becomes available again. By default, this option is set to off because usually there is no problem with continuing on the secondary node. This setting provides an opportunity to analyze and repair the problem on the failed node. It will also minimize the service disruption.
