NEW QUESTION: 3 The main objective of the Java Security Model (JSM) is to: A. Protect a web server from hostile, client code B. Provide accountability for events C. Protect the local client from user-input hostile code D. Protect the user from hostile, network mobile code Answer: D Explanation: When a user accesses a Web page through a browser, class files for an applet are downloaded automatically, even from untrusted sources. To counter this possible threat, Java provides a customizable sandbox to which the applets' execution is confined. This sandbox provides such protections as preventing reading and writing to a local disk, prohibiting the creation of a new process, prevention of making a network connection to a new host and preventing the loading of a new dynamic library and directly calling a native method. The sandbox security features are designed into the Java Virtual Machine (JVM). These features are implemented through array bounds checking, structured memory access, type-safe reference cast checking to ensure that casting to an object of a different type is valid, and checking for null references and automatic garbage collection. These checks are designed to limit memory accesses to safe, structured operations. The other answers are distracters.
