NEW QUESTION: 1What is the maximum allowable key size of the Rijndael encryption algorithm?A. 192 bitsB. 256 bitsC. 128 bitsD. 512 bitsAnswer: B*Explanation:The Rijndael algorithm, chosen as the Advanced Encryption Standard (AES) to replace DES, can be categorized as an iterated block cipher with a variable block length and keylength that can be independently chosen as 128, 192 or 256 bits. Below you have a summary of the differences between AES and Rijndael. AES is the advanced encryption standard defined by FIPS 197. It is implemented differently than Rijndael: FIPS-197 specifies that the block size must always be 128 bits in AES, and that the key size may be either 128, 192, or 256 bits. Therefore AES-128, AES-192, and AES-256 are actually:

Key Size (bits)	Number of rounds	Block Size (bits)
AES-128	128	10 Rounds
AES-256	256	14 Rounds

128 Some book will say "up to 9 rounds will be done with a 128 bits keys". Really it is 10 rounds because you must include round zero which is the first round. By contrast, the Rijndael specification per se is specified with block and key sizes that may be any multiple of 32 bits, both with a minimum of 128 and a maximum of 256 bits.
