NEW QUESTION: 1Which two JMS message types are supported by Text Message Serializer? (Choose two.) Options are :A. Bytes MessageB. Mao MessageC. Stream MessageD. Text Message
Answer: A,D

NEW QUESTION: 2Your network contains an Active Directory domain named contoso.com. The domain contains a file server named Server1 that runs Windows Server 2012 R2. Server1 has a share named Share1. When users without permission to Share1 attempt to access the share, they receive the Access Denied message as shown in the exhibit. (Click the Exhibit button.) You deploy a new file server named Server2 that runs Windows Server 2012 R2. You need to configure Server2 to display the same custom Access Denied message as Server1. What should you install on Server2?A. The Enhanced Storage featureB. The Remote Assistance featureC. The Storage Services server roleD. The File Server Resource Manager role service
Answer: D
Explanation:Explanation/Reference:Explanation:Access-Denied Assistance is a new role service of the File Server role in Windows Server 2012. We need to install the prerequisites for Access-Denied Assistance. Because Access-Denied Assistance relies up on e-mail notifications, we also need to configure each relevant file server with a Simple Mail Transfer Protocol (SMTP) server address. Let's do that quickly with Windows PowerShell: Set-FSRMSetting -SMTPServer mailserv.nuggetlab.com -AdminEmailAddress [email#160;protected] -FromEmailAddress [email#160;protected] You can enable Access-Denied Assistance either on a per-server basis or centrally via Group Policy. To my mind, the latter approach is infinitely preferable from an administration standpoint. Create a new GPO and make sure to target the GPO at your file servers' Active Directory computer accounts as well as those of your AD client computers. In the Group Policy Object Editor, we are looking for the following path to configure Access-Denied Assistance: Computer Configuration Policies Administrative Templates System Access-Denied Assistance The Customize message for Access Denied errors policy, shown in the screenshot below, enables us to create the actual message box shown to users when they access a shared file to which their user account has no access. What's cool about this policy is that we can "personalize" the e-mail notifications to give us administrators (and, optionally, file owners) the details they need to resolve the permissions issue quickly and easily. For instance, we can insert pre-defined macros to swap in the full path to the target file, the administrator e-mail address, and so forth. See this example:Whoops! It looks like you're having trouble accessing [Original File Path]. Please click Request Assistance to send [Admin Email] a help request e-mail message. Thanks!You should find that your users prefer these human-readable, informative error messages to the cryptic, non-descript error dialogs they are accustomed to dealing with. The Enable access-denied assistance on client for all file types policy should be enabled to force client computers to participate in Access-Denied Assistance. Again, you must make sure to target your GPO scope accordingly to "hit" your domain workstations as well as your Windows Server 2012 file servers.Testing the configurationThis should come as no surprise to you, but Access-Denied Assistance works only with Windows Server2012 and Windows 8 computers. More specifically, you must enable the Desktop Experience feature on your servers to see Access-Denied Assistance messages on server computers.When a Windows 8 client computer attempts to open a file to which the user has no access, the custom Access-Denied Assistance message should appear:If the user clicks Request Assistance in the Network Access dialog box, they see a secondary message:At the end of this process, the administrator(s) will receive an e-mail message that contains the key information they need in order to resolve the access problem:The user's Active Directory identityThe full path to the problematic fileA user-generated explanation of the problemSo that's it, friends! Access-Denied Assistance presents Windows systems administrators with an easy-to- manage method for more efficiently resolving user access problems on shared file system resources. Of course, the key caveat is that your file servers must run Windows Server 2012 and your client devices must run Windows 8, but other than that, this is a great technology that should save admins extra work and end-users extra headaches.Reference:

NEW QUESTION: 3Which technique allows specific VLANs to be strictly permitted by the administrator?A. transparent bridgingB. trunkallowed VLANsC. VLAN access-listD. VTP pruningE. L2P tunnelingAnswer: BExplanation:By default, a trunk port sends traffic to and receives traffic from all VLANs. All VLAN IDs, 1 to 4094, are allowed on each trunk. However, you can remove VLANs from the allowed list, preventing traffic from those VLANs from passing over the trunk. To restrict the traffic a trunk carries, use the "switchport trunk allowed vlan remove vlan-list" interface configuration command to remove specific VLANs from the allowed list.
