NEW QUESTION: 1 A company uses LDAP-based credentials and Has a Security Assertion Markup Language (SAML) 2.0 identity provider. A SysOps administrator has configured various federated roles in a new AWS account to provide AWS Management Console access for groups of users that use the existing LDAP-Based credentials. Several groups want to use the AWS CLI on their workstations to automate daily tasks. To enable them to do so, the SysOps administrator has created an application that authenticates a user and generates a SAML assertion. Which API call should be used to retrieve credentials for federated programmatic access?A. sts:AssumeRoleWithWebIdentityB. sts:GetFederationTokenC. sts:AssumeRoleD. sts:AssumeRoleWithSAMLAnswer: D

NEW QUESTION: 2 A Network Engineer is designing a new system on AWS that will take advantage of Amazon CloudFront for both content caching and for protecting the underlying origin. There is concern that an external agency might be able to access the IP addresses for the application's origin and then attack the origin despite it being served by CloudFront. Which of the following solutions provides the strongest level of protection to the origin?A. Use an IP whitelist rule in AWS WAF within CloudFront to ensure that only known-client IPs are able to access the application.B. Attach an origin access identity to the CloudFront origin that allows traffic to the origin that originates from only CloudFront.C. Configure an AWS Lambda@Edge function to validate that the traffic to the Application Load Balancer originates from CloudFront.D. Configure CloudFront to use a custom header and configure an AWS WAF rule on the origin's Application Load Balancer to accept only traffic that contains that header.Answer: A*Explanation:Explanation/Reference:
