NEW QUESTION: 1Which of the following are valid identifiers? (Choose 3)A. $1 = "Hello";B. $ 1 = "Hello World";C. function object() {}D. function_ 4You() {}E. function 4You() {}Answer: B,C,D

NEW QUESTION: 2What do IT departments use to ensure that all devices in a BYOD environment are secure?A. policy managementB. Public key infrastructureC. single sign-on authenticationD. Virtual Private NetworksAnswer: A

NEW QUESTION: 3You have altered an index supporting a constraint to be invisible on a large data warehouse table in an X5 Database Machine.Which two statements are true?A. You might drop the index and use a constraint with the DISABLE NOVALIDATE RELY flags for the constraint to be recognized.B. You might drop the index and make the constraint invisible, for the constraint to be recognized and enforced.C. You must retain the index and set the constraint to DISABLE NOVALIDATE RELY for the constraint to be recognized.D. You might retain the index, and leave it as invisible, and the constraint will still be recognized and enforced.E. You must retain the index and make it visible again for the constraint to be recognized and enforced.

Answer: C,EExplanation:Explanation/Reference:B: With making indexes invisible, we can easily check whether indexes are useful without having to drop (and in case recreate) them actually. While this may be of interest for "ordinary" Oracle Databases already, it is particular a useful feature for Exadata where we expect some conventional indexes to become obsolete after a migration.C: DISABLE NOVALIDATE RELY means: "I don't want an index and constraint checking to slow down my batch data loading into datawarehouse, but the optimizer can RELY on my data loading routine and assume this constraint is enforced by other mechanism". This information can greatly help optimizer to use correct materialized view when rewriting queries. So if you don't use materialized views for query rewrite then you can put RELY for all your constraints (or NORELY for all your constraints) and forget about it.
