NEW QUESTION: 3 Proponents of urban development oppose the popular notion that social-psychological mechanisms leading to criminal and other antisocial activity are more likely to _____ if _____ such as anonymity and population density are found. A. disappear . . problems B. fail . . criminals C. react . . factors D. function . . cities E. emerge . . traits
Answer: E
Explanation: Explanation/Reference: Explanation: Proponents of urban development would oppose the idea that urban development fosters crime. So the "mechanism" referred to in the sentence might either function, react, or emerge, but not disappear or fail. The sentence cites anonymity and population density as examples of the second missing word. It makes no sense to characterize these examples either as cities or criminals, and of the two remaining choices, choice B is weaker than choice A on two counts. First, the sentence as a whole does not strongly support the use of the word react; what the mechanisms might react to is neither stated nor inferred in the sentence. Second, while a trait is properly referred to as "found," a factor is not (factors typically "come into play"). So choice B makes for an improper idiomatic expression.
