NEW QUESTION: 1A. Option DB. Option AC. Option FD. Option CE. Option BF. Option E
Answer: D,E

NEW QUESTION: 2You are managing a policy-managed Real Application Cluster (RAC) database, RACDB with Oracle Managed Files (OMF) enabled. Examine the following outputs: You added a new server to the server pool using the following command: [oracle@gr5153 ~]$ srvctl modify srvpool -g POOL1 -i 0 -l 2 -u 4 -n gr5119 The instance on the newly added node is started by the Oracle Clusterware. Automatic Storage Management (ASM) is used as the storage option. Which statement is true regarding the redo log files for the instance? A. Oracle Clusterware automatically creates and enables a new thread of redo B. You must create redo log groups for the newly added service. C. The newly added instance must save full online log groups tracked in the control file. D. Redo log members will not be created automatically because storage option used is ASM. Answer: A Explanation: Explanation/Reference: Explanation: For a policy-managed database, when you add a new node to the cluster, it is placed in the Free pool by default. If you increase the cardinality of the database server pool, then an Oracle RAC instance is added to the new node, racnode3, and it is moved to the database server pool. No further action is necessary. Add shared storage for the undo tablespace and redo log files. If OMF is not enabled for your database, then you must manually add an undo tablespace and redo logs. You should create redo log groups only if you are using administrator-managed databases. For policy-managed databases, if an instance starts due to a change in server pool cardinality, then Oracle Database automatically creates redo log files, enables a redo thread for the instance if there is not a redo thread allocated to that instance, and creates the undo tablespace if there is not an undo tablespace allocated to that instance. The database must be using Oracle Managed Files and Oracle ASM in this situation. Oracle Database 2 Day + Real Application Clusters Guide

NEW QUESTION: 3HOTSPOT You have a SharePoint Server 2013 server farm. The farm contains a site that has the URL <https://products.contoso.com>. The site contains a master product list that is generated by using a Business Data Connectivity Service. The Business Data Connectivity Service retrieves data from the web services of several suppliers. The site also contains product documentation stored as Microsoft Word documents. The president of your company sends you the following email message: "The product list at <https://products.contoso.com> changes frequently. Our management and sales teams also make hundreds of changes to product documentation daily. I want to confirm that all of the data is backed up frequently." The database administrator sends you the following email message: "We are performing daily incremental backups of Microsoft SQL Server at noon and at midnight. Also, we are performing a full backup of SQL Server on Saturday at 06:00. I'm hoping that this is sufficient."The director of IT services sends you the following email message: "The company cannot afford to lose 12 hours of data if an issue occurs. We need to ensure that no more than the last two hours of data for the product list in SharePoint is lost if a server fails. The product documentation does not change as often as the product list, however, no more than the last four hours of product documentation in SharePoint can be lost if an issue occurs."Select Yes if the statement can be shown to be true based on the available information; otherwise select No.Answer: Explanation:
