NEW QUESTION: 2You have converted your Hadoop cluster from a MapReduce 1 (MRv1) architecture to a MapReduce 2 (MRv2) on YARN architecture. Your developers are accustomed to specifying map and reduce tasks (resource allocation) tasks when they run jobs. A developer wants to know how specify to reduce tasks when a specific job runs. Which method should you tell that developer to implement?A. In YARN, the ApplicationMaster is responsible for requesting the resources required for a specific job. Thus, executing `-p yarn.applicationmaster.reduce.tasks=2` will specify that the ApplicationMaster launch two task containers on the worker nodes.B. In YARN, resource allocation is a function of virtual cores specified by the ApplicationMaster making requests to the NodeManager where a reduce task is handled by a single container (and this a single virtual core). Thus, the developer needs to specify the number of virtual cores to the NodeManager by executing `-p yarn.nodemanager.cpuscores=2`C. MapReduce version 2 (MRv2) on YARN abstracts resource allocation away from the idea of "tasks" into memory and virtual cores, thus eliminating the need for a developer to specify the number of reduce tasks, and indeed preventing the developer from specifying the number of reduce tasks.D. In YARN, resource allocation is a function of megabytes of memory in multiple of 1024mb. Thus, they should specify the amount of memory resource they need by executing `-D mapreduce.reduce.memory-mp-2040`E. Developers specify reduce tasks in the exact same way for both MapReduce version 1 (MRv1) and MapReduce version 2 (MRv2) on YARN. Thus, executing `-p mapreduce.job.reduce-2` will specify 2 reduce tasks.Answer: B
