NEW QUESTION: 3 Your company has defined a number of EC2 Instances over a period of 6 months. They want to know if any of the security groups allow unrestricted access to a resource. What is the best option to accomplish this requirement? Please select:A. Use AWS Config to see which security groups have compromised access.B. Use the AWS CLI to query the security groups and then filter for the rules which have unrestricted accessC. Use the AWS Trusted Advisor to see which security groups have compromised access.D. Use AWS Inspector to inspect all the security GroupsAnswer: C*Explanation: Explanation The AWS Trusted Advisor can check security groups for rules that allow unrestricted access to a resource. Unrestricted access increases opportunities for malicious activity (hacking, denial-of-service attacks, loss of data). If you go to AWS Trusted Advisor, you can see the details Option A is invalid because AWS Inspector is used to detect security vulnerabilities in instances and not for security groups. Option C is invalid because this can be used to detect changes in security groups but not show you security groups that have compromised access. Option D is partially valid but would just be a maintenance overhead For more information on the AWS Trusted Advisor, please visit the
