NEW QUESTION: 1A. Option DB. Option CC. Option BD. Option AAnswer: B

NEW QUESTION: 2Which two statements are true about Real-Time Query?A. Real-Time Query sessions can be connected to a Far Sync instance.B. Disabling Real-Time Query prevents the automatic start of redo apply when a physical standby database is opened READ ONLY.C. A standby database enabled for Real-Time Query cannot be the Fast-Start Failover target of the Data Guard configuration.D. Setting STANDBY_MAX_DATA_DELAY =0 requires synchronous redo transport.E. Real-Time Query has no limitations regarding the protection level of the Data Guard environment.Answer: B, E*Explanation:Explanation/Reference:If a license for the Oracle Active Data Guard option has been purchased, Redo Apply can be active while the physical standby database is open, thus allowing queries to return results that are identical to what would be returned from the primary database. This capability is known as the real-time query feature.Incorrect Answers:A: If STANDBY_MAX_DATA_DELAY is set to 0, a query issued to a physical standby database is guaranteed to return the exact same result as if the query were issued on the primary database, unless the standby database is lagging behind the primary database, in which case an ORA-3172 error is returned.Note: The STANDBY_MAX_DATA_DELAY session parameter can be used to specify a session-specific apply lag tolerance, measured in seconds, for queries issued by non-administrative users to a physical standby database that is in real-time query mode. This capability allows queries to be safely offloaded from the primary database to a physical standby database, because it is possible to detect if the standby database has become unacceptably stale.
