NEW QUESTION: 1 Which of the following channel structures have the best means of managing channel conflict? I. Conventional III. Vertical III. Horizontal IV. Multichannel A. I, III, and IV. B. II, III, and IV. C. I and II. D. II and III. Answer: B Explanation: In vertical distribution systems, channel conflict is managed through common ownership, contractual relationships, or administration by one or a few dominant channel members. The joint nature of horizontal distribution efforts is the tool for managing channel conflict. In a multichannel system, because such a system is managed by a single entity, channel conflicts can be evaluated and managed internally. Conventional distribution systems consist of one or more independent producers, wholesalers, and retailers, each of which is a separate profit maximizing business. The profit objective of each independent channel member may result in actions that are not profit-maximizing for the system as a whole, and the conventional distribution system offers no means for controlling channel conflict.
