NEW QUESTION: 1 Consider a company that sells products to consumers: as one product begins the deterioration and death phases of its life cycle (or the divestment phase of a system), new products or projects must be established. This means that _____
A. The company is in a period of overall decline
B. The company requires a continuous stream of projects to survive
C. The company definitely lacks a balanced portfolio
D. The company is not at a high level of maturity
Answer: B
Explanation: Explanation/Reference: Explanation: Organizations that rely on products for their revenue must constantly be introducing new products into the marketplace as old products are removed. Ideally, this should be an overlapping process to maintain balanced or increasing revenue over time. The closure phase evaluates the efforts of the total system and serves as input to the conceptual phase for new projects and systems. It also has an impact on other ongoing projects with regard to identifying priorities.
