NEW QUESTION: 3What is the purpose of Trusted Distribution?A. To ensure that messages received at the Trusted Computing Base are not old messages being resent as part of a replay attack.B. To ensure that messages sent from a central office to remote locations are free from tampering.C. To prevent the sniffing of data as it travels through an untrusted network enroute to a trusted network.D. To ensure that the Trusted Computing Base is not tampered with during shipment or installation.*Answer: D*Explanation:One of the first accepted evaluation standards was the Trusted Computer Security Evaluation Criteria or TCSEC. The Orange Book was part of this standard that defines four security divisions consisting of seven different classes for security ratings. The lowest class offering the least protection is D - Minimal protection. The highest classification would be A1 offering the most secure environment. As you go to the next division and class you inherit the requirements of the lower levels. So, for example C2 would also incorporate the requirements for C1 and D. Design specification and verification is a formal model of the security policy supported through the life-cycle of the system. Trusted Distribution is ensuring nothing has been tampered with not even the documentation, this is part of the Life-Cycle Assurance Requirements (See below) Life-cycle Assurance Requirements- Security Testing- Design Specification and verification- Configuration Management- Trusted system distribution The following answers are incorrect: To ensure that messages sent from a central office to remote locations are free from tampering. This is incorrect because it does not deal with the Trusted Computing Base. To prevent the sniffing of data as it travels through an untrusted network enroute to a trusted network. This is incorrect because it does not deal with the Trusted Computing Base. To ensure that messages received at the Trusted Computing Base are not old messages being resent as part of a replay attack. This is incorrect because it does not deal with ensuring the Trusted Computing Base has not been tampered with. References: NIST <http://csrc.nist.gov/publications/secpubs/rainbow/std001.txt>
