NEW QUESTION: 3For each job, the Hadoop framework generates task log files. Where are Hadoop's task log files stored?A. Cached on the local disk of the slave node running the task, then purged immediately upon task completion.B. On the local disk of the slave node running the task.C. Cached on the local disk of the slave node running the task, then copied into HDFS.D. In HDFS, in the directory of the user who generates the job.Answer: D*Explanation:Job StatisticsThese logs are created by the jobtracker. The jobtracker runtime statistics from jobs to these files.Those statistics include task attempts, time spent shuffling, input splits given to task attempts, starttimes of tasks attempts and other information.The statistics files are named:<hostname>_<epoch-of-jobtracker-start>_<job-id>_<job-name>where <hostname> is the hostname of the machine creating these logs, <epoch-of-jobtracker-start> is the number of milliseconds that had elapsed since Unix Epoch when the jobtrackerdaemon was started, <job-id> is the job ID, and <job-name> is the name of the job.For example: ec2-72-44-61-184.compute-1.amazonaws.com_1250641772616_job_200908190029_0002_hadoop_test-mini-mrThese logs are not rotated. You can clear these logs periodically without affecting Hadoop.However, consider archiving the logs if they are of interest in the job development process. Makesure you do not move or delete a file that is being written to by a running job.Individual statistics logs are created for each job that is submitted to the cluster. The size of each log file varies. Jobs with more tasks produce larger files.Reference:Apache Hadoop Log Files: Where to find them in CDH, and what info they contain
