NEW QUESTION: 3"Old woman," grumbled the burly white man who had just heard Sojourner Truth speak, "do you think yourtalk about slavery does any good? I don't care any more for your talk than I do for the bite of a flea." Thetall, imposing black woman turned her piercing eyes on him. "Perhaps not," she answered, "but I'll keepyou scratching." The little incident of the 1840s sums up all that Sojourner Truth was: utterly dedicated tospreading her message, afraid of no one, forceful and witty in speech. Yet forty years earlier, who couldhave suspected that a spindly slave girl growing up in a damp cellar in upstate New York would becomeone of the most remarkable women in American history? Her name then was Isabella (many slaves hadno last names), and by the time she was fourteen she had seen both parents die of cold and hunger. Sheherself had been sold several times. By 1827, when New York freed its slaves, she had married andborne five children. The first hint of Isabella's fighting spirit came soon afterwards, when her youngest sonwas illegally seized and sold. She marched to the courthouse and badgered officials until her son wasreturned to her. In 1843, inspired by religion, she changed her name to Sojourner (meaning "one whostays briefly") Truth, and, with only pennies in her purse, set out to preach against slavery. From NewEngland to Minnesota she trekked, gaining a reputation for her plain but powerful and moving words.Incredibly, despite being black and female (only white males were expected to be public speakers), she drew thousands to town halls, tents, and churches to hear her powerful, deep-voiced pleas on equality forblacks-and for women. Often she had to face threatening hoodlums. Once she stood before armed bulliesand sang a hymn to them. Awed by her courage and her commanding presence, they sheepishlyretreated. During the Civil War she cared for homeless ex-slaves in Washington. President Lincoln invitedher to the White House to bestow praise on her. Later, she petitioned Congress to help former slaves getland in the West. Even in her old age, she forced the city of Washington to integrate its trolley cars so thatblack and white could ride together. Shortly before her death at eighty-six, she was asked what kept hergoing. "I think of the great things," replied Sojourner.Sojourner Truth was raised in a damp cellar in-A. MarylandB. GeorgiaC. New JerseyD. New YorkE. IdahoAnswer: D
