NEW QUESTION: 1 Examine the command to duplicate a database:RMAN> DUPLICATE TARGET DATABASE TO cdbPLUGGABLE DATABASE pdb1, pdb5;Which two statements are true about the DUPLICATE command?A. The duplicate command first creates a backup, and then duplicates the PDBs by using the backup.B. The root and the seed database in the container database (CDB) are also duplicated.C. An auxiliary instance must be started with the initialization parameter ENABLE_PLUGGABLE_DATABASE set to TRUE.D. A backup of pdb1 and pd5 must exist before executing the command.E. The SPFILE is copied along with the data files of the pluggable databases (PDBs).Answer: B,CExplanation:Explanation/Reference:Explanation:Do backups of the source database exist? The principal advantage of active database duplication is that it does not require source database backups. Active duplication copies mounted or online database files over a network to the auxiliary instance. One disadvantage of this technique is the negative performance effect on the network. Another disadvantage is that the source database is running processes required to transfer the files to the auxiliary host, thereby affecting the source database and production workload. If the source database backups exist, and if the effect on the network is unacceptable, then backup-based duplication may be a better option. You can copy backups to temporary storage and transfer them manually to the destination host. If duplication is made with a connection to the target or the recovery catalog, then the backup files on the destination host must have the same file specification as they had on the source host. Otherwise, this is not a requirement.
