NEW QUESTION: 1A benefit of using a full disclosure (white box) approach as compared to a blind (black box) approach to penetration testing is that:A. critical infrastructure information is not revealed to the tester.B. it simulates the real-life situation of an external security attack.C. less time is spent on reconnaissance and information gathering.D. human intervention is not required for this type of test.Answer: C*Explanation:Data and information required for penetration are shared with the testers, thus eliminating time that would otherwise have been spent on reconnaissance and gathering of information. Blind (black box) penetration testing is closer to real life than full disclosure (white box) testing. There is no evidence to support that human intervention is not required for this type of test. A full disclosure (white box) methodology requires the knowledge of the subject being tested.
