NEW QUESTION: 1You have an on-premises data warehouse that includes the following fact tables. Both tables have the following columns: DataKey, ProductKey, RegionKey. There are 120 unique product keys and 65 unique region keys. Queries that use the data warehouse take a long time to complete. You plan to migrate the solution to use Azure SQL Data Warehouse. You need to ensure that the Azure-based solution optimizes query performance and minimizes processing skew. What should you recommend? To answer, select the appropriate options in the answer area. NOTE: Each correct selection is worth one point. Answer: Explanation: ExplanationBox 1: Hash-distributedBox 2: ProductKeyProductKey is used extensively in joins. Hash-distributed tables improve query performance on large fact tables.Box 3: Round-robinBox 4: RegionKeyRound-robin tables are useful for improving loading speed. Consider using the round-robin distribution for your table in the following scenarios:* When getting started as a simple starting point since it is the default* If there is no obvious joining key* If there is not good candidate column for hash distributing the table* If the table does not share a common join key with other tables* If the join is less significant than other joins in the query* When the table is a temporary staging tableNote: A distributed table appears as a single table, but the rows are actually stored across 60 distributions. The rows are distributed with a hash or round-robin algorithm. References: <https://docs.microsoft.com/en-us/azure/sql-data-warehouse/sql-data-warehouse-tables-distribute>
