NEW QUESTION: 2Which Orange book security rating is the FIRST to be concerned with covert channels?A. B3B. B2C. B1D. A1Answer: BExplanation:This class ("Structured Protection") requires more stringent authentication mechanisms and well-defined interfaces between layers. Subjects and devices require labels and the system must not allow covert channels.A1 is incorrect. A1 is also called "Verified Design" and requires formal verification of the design and specifications. B3 is incorrect. B3 is also called "Security Domains" and imposes more granularity in each protection mechanism. B1 is incorrect. B1 is also called "Labeled Security" and each data object must have a classification label and each subject a clearance label. On each access attempt, the classification and clearance are checked to verify that the access is permissible.EXAM TIP: The CBK only discusses the TCSEC in a very minimal fashion and the details are presented in a much more completely in the Shon Harris, All In One book. Folk wisdom has it that this reflects theCBK/security industry migration away from the TCSEC to the CC but the wise candidate willdevelop at least some familiarity with the TCSEC. There are still questions on TCSEC showing uprandomly on the exam.NOTE FROM CLEMENT:As of today (April 2014) subjects such as the TCSEC are still proclaimed to be on the exam. Domake sure that you take some time to review the TCSEC ratings.You can download a nice one page resume of the TCSEC rating at the following link:https://www.freepracticetests.org/documents/tcsec.pdfDo study this one page document and get familiar with what is being introduced at each of the TCSEC levels. Good questions might be for example:1.At what level are labels introduced?2.At what level is the Security Administrator role defined?3.At what level are covert channel first introduced?4.At what level do you use formal methods?References:The Official ISC2 CBK study guide, pages 329 - 330.AIO3, pp. 302 - 306AIOv4 Security Architecture and Design (pages 357 - 361)AIOv5 Security Architecture and Design (pages 358 - 362)

NEW QUESTION: 3Which statements are true regarding the creation of an incident package file by using the EM Workbench Support? (Choose all that apply.)A. You can add or remove the trace files to the package.B. You cannot create an incremental incident package when the physical files are purged from the ADR.C. You can create the incremental incident package ZIP file for new or modified diagnostic information for the incident package already created.D. You can add SQL test cases to the incident package.Answer: A,C,DExplanation:Refer to here About Quick Packaging and Custom Packaging The Enterprise Manager Support Workbench provides two methods for creating and uploading an incident package: the quick packaging method and the custom packaging method. Quick Packaging-This is the more automated method with a minimum of steps, organized in a guided workflow (a wizard). You select a single problem, provide a package name and description, and then schedule upload of the package contents, either immediately or at a specified date and time. The Support Workbench automatically places diagnostic data related to the problem into the package, finalizes the package, creates the zip file, and then uploads the file. With this method, you do not have the opportunity to add, edit, or remove package files or add other diagnostic data such as SQL test cases. However, it is the simplest and quickest way to get first-failure diagnostic data to Oracle Support. Quick packaging is the method used in the workflow described in "Investigating, Reporting, and Resolving a Problem". Note that when quick packaging is complete, the package that was created by the wizard remains. You can then modify the package with custom packaging operations at a later time and manually reupload. Custom Packaging-This is the more manual method, with more steps. It is intended for expert Support Workbench users who want more control over the packaging process. With custom packaging, you can create a new package with one or more problems, or you can add one or more problems to an existing package. You can then perform a variety of operations on the new or updated package, including:You might conduct these operations over a number of days, before deciding that you have enough diagnostic information to send to Oracle Support. With custom packaging, you create the zip file and request upload to Oracle Support as two separate steps. Each of these steps can be performed immediately or scheduled for a future date and time. Select the Full or Incremental option to generate a full package zip file or an incremental package zip file. For a full package zip file, all the contents of the package (original contents and all correlated data) are always added to the zip file. For an incremental package zip file, only the diagnostic information that is new or modified since the last time that you created a zip file for the same package is added to the zip file. For example, if trace information was appended to a trace file since that file was last included in the generated physical file for a package, the trace file is added to the incremental package zip file. Conversely, if no changes were made to a trace file since it was last uploaded for a package, that trace file is not included in the incremental package zip file.
