NEW QUESTION: 3 Examples of types of physical access controls include all except which of the following?A. locksB. passwordsC. badgesD. guardsAnswer: BExplanation:A password is not a physical thing, it's a logical one. You can control physical access with armed guards, by locking doors and using badges to open doors, but you can't relate password to a physical environment. Just to remember, Passwords are used to verify that the user of an ID is the owner of the ID. The ID-password combination is unique to each user and therefore provides a means of holding users accountable for their activity on the system. They are related to software, not to hardware.
