NEW QUESTION: 2Which three statements are true about the default value for an entity object attribute? (Choose three.)A. It can be defined by referencing a database stored procedure.B. It can be defined by an Expression Language (EL) statement.C. It can be a literal value.D. It can be defined by a Groovy expression.E. It can be defined by a SQL select statement.Answer: B,C,D Explanation:Explanation/Reference:Explanation:A: The Value field (in the Edit Attribute dialog) allows you to specify a static default value for the attribute when the Value Type is set to Literal. For example, you can set the default value of the ServiceRequest entity object's Status attribute to Open, or set the default value of the User entity object's UserRole attribute to user.B: You can use a Groovy expression to define a default value for an attribute. This approach is useful if you want to be able to change default values at runtime.D: Groovy scripting logic is similar to
