NEW QUESTION: 2 You are designing a Windows Presentation Foundation (WPF) application. The WPF application displays indicators to compare your company's past performance to the current day's operations data. The WPF application accesses historic data from your company's data warehouse through a Web service, and accesses current data directly from a Microsoft SQL Server 2008 database. The WPF application must meet the following requirements: Retrieve historic data from the data warehouse at application startup and then once per day. Retrieve current data from the database every five minutes, and then update the indicators. Cache all retrieved data. Target the .NET Framework 4 Client Profile. You need to recommend an approach to data caching. What should you recommend?
A. Use System.Web.Caching with absolute expiration.
B. Use System.Runtime.Caching with an absolute expiration.
C. Use System.Web.Caching with a sliding expiration.
D. Use System.Runtime.Caching with a sliding expiration.
Answer: D
Explanation: Runtime.Caching is the critical here since it is updated every five minutes => A, D out. Sliding expiration will not lose cached data so easily. B out => C
Better Answer : Use System.Runtime.Caching with a sliding expiration.
