NEW QUESTION: 1You have a web application deployed as a managed instance group. You have a new version of the application to gradually deploy. Your web application is currently receiving live web traffic.You want to ensure that the available capacity does not decrease during the deployment. What should you do?A. Perform a rolling-action start-update with maxSurge set to 0 and maxUnavailable set to 1.B. Perform a rolling-action start-update with maxSurge set to 1 and maxUnavailable set to 0.C. Create a new managed instance group with an updated instance template.Add the group to the backend service for the load balancer. When all instances in the new managed instance group are healthy, delete the old managed instance group.D. Create a new instance template with the new application version.Update the existing managed instance group with the new instance template.Delete the instances in the managed instance group to allow the managed instance group to recreate the instance using the new instance template.Answer: BExplanation:We need to ensure the global capacity remains intact, for that reason we need to establish maxUnavailable to 0. On the other hand, we need to ensure new instances can be created. We do that by establishing the maxSurge to 1. Option C is more expensive and more difficult to set up and option D won't meet requirements since it won't keep global capacity intact.
