NEW QUESTION: 2Some users are having problems connecting via clientless SSL VPN, while other users are experiencing no problems. What is one possible cause of this issue?A. The Cisco ASA identity certificates have not been generated.B. The Cisco ASA identity certificate is not bound to the SSL interface.C. SSL version checking is enabled, and clients are connecting with denied versions.D. SSL VPN termination is not enabled.Answer: C
Explanation:
http://www.cisco.com/web/about/security/intelligence/05_08_SSL-VPN-Security.html Host identity verification There is a difference between trusting a user (after passing strong user authentication) and trusting that user's computer. While the former has traditionally been emphasized, only recently has the latter been given sufficient attention (see Trusted Platform Module - TPM).As discussed earlier, a Trojan-laden computer defeats strong user authentication. But a "company computer", which is typically supported and managed according to corporate security policies, typically deserves more trust than a "non-company computer". A secure SSL VPN infrastructure should allow you to verify a remote host's identity by checking on predefined end device parameters. Examples include registry entries, special files in a specified location, or digital certificates (as a form of device authentication). The host identity information can be used to make your access permission decisions.
