NEW QUESTION: 3Client MFP supplements rather than replaces infrastructure MFP. Which three are client MFP components? (Choose three.)A. error generationB. non-management messages protectionC. error reportsD. protection and validation of management framesE. key generation and distributionAnswer: C,D,EExplanation:Client MFP Components Client MFP consists of these components:---Key generation and distribution Protection and validation of management frames Error reportsKey Generation and Distribution Client MFP does not use the key generation and distribution mechanisms that were derived for Infrastructure MFP. Instead, client MFP leverages the security mechanisms defined by IEEE 802.11i to also protect class 3 unicast management frames. Stations must support CCXv5 and must negotiate either TKIP or AES-CCMP to use client MFP. EAP or PSK can be used to obtain the PMK. Protection of Management Frames Unicast class 3 management frames are protected with the application of either AESCCMP or TKIP in a similar manner to that already used for data frames. Parts of the frame header are copied into the encrypted payload component of each frame for added protection, as discussed in the next sections. These frame types are protected:---Disassociation Deauthentication QoS (WMM) action framesAES-CCMP- and TKIP-protected data frames include a sequence counter in the IV fields, which is used to prevent replay detection. The current transmit counter is used for both data and management frames, but a new receive counter is used for management frames. The receive counters are tested to ensure that each frame has a higher number than the last received frame (to ensure that the frames are unique and have not been replayed), so it does not matter that this scheme causes the received values to be non-sequential.
