NEW QUESTION: 1When an elder client asks the nurse whether he will be capable of sexual activity in old age, the best response by the nurse is:A. "If you haven't been sexually active throughout your life, you will not be able to participate in sexual activity in old age."B. "You might find it takes longer for you to achieve an erection, but you can maintain it for a longer time."C. "When intercourse isn't possible, many of your sexual needs can be met through intimacy and touch."D. "Elder adults are psychologically and physically capable of engaging in sexual activity regardless of age-related changes."Answer: D*Explanation: Explanation/Reference:Explanation:To provide the best response, the nurse must identify what the elder is asking. Concern is being expressed about whether elders can engage in sexual activity. The most therapeutic response by the nurse is Choice1. In this choice, the nurse acknowledges that elders can physically engage in sexual activity and have no psychological barriers to the same. All of the other choices contain facts but are not the best initial response. Choice 1 opens the conversation for the expression of further concerns about sexual issues. Choice 2 is true; past sexual function is predictive of sexual function in elder adults. An elder adult must have been sexually active as a younger adult to engage in intercourse in old age. This does not mean, however, that the elder adult cannot experience sexual intimacy in other ways. The need for intimacy is especially important for elder adults. If they have lost meaningful relationships or are having difficulty with intercourse, they might be able to experience intimacy through touch. As males age, they find it takes longer to achieve an erection, but that when it's achieved, the erection lasts longer. In addition, elder males require direct stimulation to achieve an erection.
