file=p.toAbsolutePath(LinkOption.NOFOLLOW_LINKS).toFile());try (BufferWriter br = new BufferWriter (new FileWriter(File))) {br.write ("experience new features of java");}}

Answer: C,E
Explanation: The problem in this scenario is how to construct a system-dependent filename from the string "payroll\salary.dat". Regarding File-paths: 1- A file can have many relative paths. 2- Canonical paths are absolute paths. 3- An absolute path is not necessarily a canonical path! This holds true especially under Unix, which support symbolic links. Under Windows, an absolute path is usually a canonical path. B: The absolute path can include symbolic links. Here we ignore them with NOFOLLOW_LINKS option. D: The File.getCanonicalFile Method creates a new instance of a File object representing the file located at the absolute path of the current File object. All '.' and '..' references will be resolved.
