NEW QUESTION: 1Your network contains an Active Directory domain named contoso.com.You plan to deploy a child domain named sales.contoso.com.The domain controllers in sales.contoso.com will be DNS servers for sales.contoso.com.You need to ensure that users in contoso.com can connect to servers in sales.contoso.com by using fully qualified domain names (FQDNs).What should you do?A. Create a DNS forwarder.B. Configure an alternate DNS server on all client computers.C. Configure root hint servers.D. Create a DNS delegation.

Answer: DExplanation:

<http://technet.microsoft.com/en-us/library/cc784494%28v=ws.10%29.aspx> Delegating zones DNS provides the option of dividing up the namespace into one or more zones, which can then be stored, distributed, and replicated to other DNS servers. When deciding whether to divide your DNS namespace to make additional zones, consider the following reasons to use additional zones: A need to delegate management of part of your DNS namespace to another location or department within your organization. A need to divide one large zone into smaller zones for distributing traffic loads among multiple servers, improve DNS name resolution performance, or create a more fault-tolerant DNS environment. A need to extend the namespace by adding numerous subdomains at once, such as to accommodate the opening of a new branch or site. If, for any of these reasons, you could benefit from delegating zones, it might make sense to restructure your namespace by adding additional zones. When choosing how to structure zones, you should use a plan that reflects the structure of your organization. When delegating zones within your namespace, be aware that for each new zone you create, you will need delegation records in other zones that point to the authoritative DNS servers for the new zone. This is necessary both to transfer authority and to provide correct referral to other DNS servers and clients of the new servers being made authoritative for the new zone.

When a standard primary zone is first created, it is stored as a text file containing all resource record information on a single DNS server. This server acts as the primary master for the zone. Zone information can be replicated to other DNS servers to improve fault tolerance and server performance. When structuring your zones, there are several good reasons to use additional DNS servers for zone replication:

1. Added DNS servers provide zone redundancy, enabling DNS names in the zone to be resolved for clients if a primary server for the zone stops responding.
2. Added DNS servers can be placed so as to reduce DNS network traffic. For example, adding a DNS server to the opposing side of a low-speed WAN link can be useful in managing and reducing network traffic.
3. Additional secondary servers can be used to reduce loads on a primary server for a zone. Example: Delegating a subdomain to a new zone

As shown in the following figure, when a new zone for a subdomain (example.microsoft.com) is created, delegation from the parent zone (microsoft.com) is needed. In this example, an authoritative DNS server computer for the newly delegated example.microsoft.com subdomain is named based on a derivative subdomain included in the new zone (ns1.us.example.microsoft.com). To make this server known to others outside of the new delegated zone, two RRs are needed in the microsoft.com zone to complete delegation to the new zone. These RRs include: An NS RR to effect the delegation. This RR is used to advertise that the server named ns1.us.example.microsoft.com is an authoritative server for the delegated subdomain. An A RR (also known as a glue record) is needed to resolve the name of the server specified in the NS RR to its IP address. The process of resolving the host name in this RR to the delegated DNS server in the NS RR is sometimes referred to as glue chasing. Note When zone delegations are correctly configured, normal zone referral behavior can sometimes be circumvented if you are using forwarders in your DNS server configuration.

NEW QUESTION: 2 A technician finds an external hard drive with the markings "IEEE 1394" on it. Which of the following cable types would be needed to view the contents of this drive?
A. FireWire B. Ethernet C. eSATA D. MicroUSB
Answer: A

NEW QUESTION: 3 A user wants to create a public subnet with VPC and launch instances inside that subnet. If the user has created a public private subnet, the instances in the public subnet can receive inbound traffic directly from the internet, whereas the instances in the private subnet cannot. If these subnets are created with Wizard, AWS will create a NAT instance with an elastic IP. Wizard will also create two subnets with route tables. It will also create an internet gateway and attach it to the VPC.
Answer: C

NEW QUESTION: 4 What would be used to combine multiple switches into a single management platform?
A. Virtual Chassis B. redundant trunk groups C. Virtual Router Redundancy Protocol D. graceful Routing Engine switchover
Answer: A
Explanation/Reference: Explanation: Many Juniper Networks EX Series switches support the Virtual Chassis flexible, scaling switch solution. You can connect individual switches together to form one unit and manage the unit as a single chassis.
