NEW QUESTION: 1 Refer to the exhibit. What information can be derived from the output?
A. Devices connected to interfaces FastEthernet3/1 and FastEthernet3/2 are sending BPDUs with a superior root bridge parameter and no traffic is forwarded across the ports. After the inaccurate BPDUs have been stopped, the interfaces automatically recover and resume normal operation.
B. Interfaces FastEthernet3/1 and FastEthernet3/2 are candidates for becoming the STP root port, but neither can realize that role until BPDUs with a superior root bridge parameter are no longer received on at least one of the interfaces.
C. Devices connected to interfaces FastEthernet3/1 and FastEthernet3/2 are sending BPDUs with a superior root bridge parameter, but traffic is still forwarded across the ports.
D. Interfaces FastEthernet3/1 and FastEthernet3/2 are connected to devices that are sending BPDUs with a superior root bridge parameter and no traffic is forwarded across the ports. After the sending of BPDUs has stopped, the interfaces must be shut down administratively, and brought back up, to resume normal operation.
Answer: A
Explanation: Root guard is configured on a per-port basis. If a superior BPDU is received on the port, root guard does not take the BPDU into account and so puts the port into a root-inconsistent state. When devices connected on FastEthernet3/1 and FastEthernet3/2 stop sending superior BPDUs, the port will be unblocked again and will transition through STP states like any other port.
