NEW QUESTION: 2The problem just described is best approximated by use of which quantitative method?A. Integrated autoregressive-moving average (ARIMA) modeling.B. Linear programming.C. Exponential smoothing, multiple parameters.D. Queuing theory.Answer: D
Explanation:Two basic costs are involved in queuing (waiting-line) models: 1) the cost of providing service (including facility costs and operating costs), and 2) the cost of idle resources waiting in line. The latter may be a direct cost if paid employees are waiting, or an opportunity cost in the case of waiting customers. The objective of the queuing theory is to minimize the total cost of the system, including both service and waiting costs, for a given rate of arrivals. This minimization occurs at the point where the cost of waiting is balanced by the cost of providing service. A bank has two drive-in lanes to serve customers: one attached to the bank itself and one on an island. One teller serves both stations. The bank is interested in determining the average waiting times of customers and has developed a model based on random numbers. The two key factors are the time between successive car arrivals and the time customers wait in line. Assume that the analysis begins with cars just arriving at both service windows, both requiring 3 minutes of service time. Car 1 is at the attached window and Car 2 is at the island window. The lone teller will always serve the car that arrived first. If two cars arrive simultaneously, the one at the attached window will be served before the one at the island.
