NEW QUESTION: 2You have been tasked with allocating an identity to one of your compute instances that needs to retrieve and process static files that are stored in an Object Storage bucket. After creating a dynamic group with a matching rule that specifies the OCID of the compute instance, you discover that API calls are failing. Which step should you take to resolve this issue?A. Initial credentials must be initialized using OCI console for the Instance in dynamic group. This can be a bulk operation.B. Create IAM policies to permit instances in these groups to make API calls against Oracle Cloud Infrastructure services.C. Create IAM policies to permit users in these groups to make API calls against Oracle Cloud Infrastructure services.D. Once instance are in dynamic group no additional steps are required.Answer: CExplanation: Explanation Dynamic groups allow you to group Oracle Cloud Infrastructure computer instances as "principal" actors (similar to user groups). You can then create policies to permit instances to make API calls against Oracle Cloud Infrastructure services. When you create a dynamic group, rather than adding members explicitly to the group, you instead define a set of matching rules to define the group members.
