NEW QUESTION: 3A union philosophy statement may have all of the following except which?A. A promise of extended benefits if the company remains union freeB. A description of what a union cannot do for the employeesC. Factual statements about the disadvantages of unions in the labor/management relationshipD. A statement of the company's desire to remain union freeAnswer: A
Explanation: Answer option D is correct. A company cannot threaten employees or make promises to them contingent on the workforce remaining union free. A philosophy statement should be geared toward communicating the company's desire to work directly with the employees in discussions about working conditions or benefits. If a union does attempt to organize, it is important for the employer to work directly with outside council to determine the strategic benefits of discussing the desire to remain union free and the disadvantages/limitations of unions as employee representatives.
