But premium income can be invested and will then yield returns of its own. Therefore, an under priced policy does not represent a net loss in every case.The argument above is based on which of the following assumptions?A. There are policies for which the level of claims per year can be predicted with great accuracy before premiums are set.B. The claims against at least some underpriced policies do not require paying out all of the premium income from those policies as soon as it is earned.C. No insurance policies are deliberately underpriced in order to attract customers to the insurance company offering such policies.D. The income earned by investing premium income is the most important determinant of an insurance company's profits.E. A policy that represents a net loss to the insurance company is not an underpriced policy in every case.Answer: BExplanation:Explanation/Reference:Explanation:
