NEW QUESTION: 2 Object dependencies are Mutual dependency between objects. A. Correct B. Incorrect Answer: A

NEW QUESTION: 3 View the Exhibit. You administer the network shown above. All the routers run EIGRP. Automatic summarization is enabled throughout the network. On which router or routers should you disable automatic summarization? A. RouterC and RouterE B. RouterB and RouterC C. RouterA, RouterB, and RouterD D. RouterA and RouterE E. all the routers on the network F. RouterE Answer: D Explanation: Explanation/Reference: Section: Addressing and Routing Protocols in an Existing Network Explanation: You should disable automatic summarization on RouterA and RouterD. A summary route is used to advertise a group of contiguous networks as a single route, thus reducing the size of the routing table. Some routing protocols, such as Enhanced Interior Gateway Routing Protocol (EIGRP) and Routing Information Protocol version 2 (RIPv2), automatically summarize routes on classful network boundaries. Automatic summarization can cause problems when classful networks are discontinuous within a network topology. A discontinuous subnet exists when a summarized route advertises one or more subnets that should not be reachable through that route. Therefore, when discontinuous networks in the same subnet exist in a topology, you should disable automatic summarization with the no autosummary command. When you disable automatic summarization, the routing protocol can advertise the actual networks instead of the classful summary. The network diagram shows that both RouterA and RouterD are configured with different parts of the 172.16.0.0/16 Class B address space. Because automatic summarization is enabled, RouterA and RouterD will advertise the 172.16.0.0/16 summary routes to RouterE. You do not need to disable automatic summarization on RouterE. When RouterE receives the 172.16.1.0/24 route from RouterA and the 172.16.2.0/24 route from RouterD, RouterE will advertise a summarized 172.16.0.0/16 route to RouterB and RouterC. Because RouterB and RouterC do not contain any part of the 172.16.0.0/16 address space, they will send all traffic destined for the 172.16.0.0/16 network to RouterE. RouterE will then route the traffic to the appropriate next-hop router. You do not need to disable automatic summarization on RouterB. RouterB will advertise a 10.0.0.0/8 summary route to RouterE, and RouterE will advertise the same summary route to the other routers on the network. Because no other router on the network contains any part of the 10.0.0.0/8 Class A address space, all other routers will send all traffic destined for the 10.0.0.0/8 network to RouterE, which will route the traffic to RouterB. You do not need to disable automatic summarization on RouterC. RouterC will advertise the 192.168.0.0/24 network to RouterE. Because the other routers on the network do not contain any part of the 192.168.0.0/24 Class C address space, they will send all traffic destined for the 192.168.0.0/24 network to RouterE, which will route the traffic to RouterC. The point-to-point links between routers belong to address spaces that do not overlap with each other or with the 192.168.0.0/24 network.
