NEW QUESTION: 1 You are the business analyst for your organization and are working on organizing the identified requirements for a new solution. Nancy, your assistant in this process, says that these requirements aren't very complex. You agree but add that it's this thing that makes the overall solution complex. What thing adds to the level of complexity among requirements?A. Management in the projectB. Cost and schedule constraintsC. Relationships among the requirementsD. Stakeholders in the projectAnswer: CExplanation:ExplanationThe relationships and inter-dependencies among the requirements add to the complexity of the requirements.Answer D is incorrect. Stakeholder management can be cumbersome, but the question was asking for arequirements characteristic, so this choice is incorrect.Answer B is incorrect. Management in the project can add to the project complexity, but realistically management should stay out of the business analyst's duties. In addition, the question was asking about the complexity among the requirements.Answer C is incorrect. Cost and schedule constraints deal more with the project implementation than with theidentified requirements.

NEW QUESTION: 3A Java EE application server has four different security realms for user management. One of the security realms is custom made. This realm supports only individual user entries, no grouping of users, and is used by the application. Which two statements are true? (Choose two.)A. All security roles need a role-link entry in the deployment descriptor.B. EJB developers cannot use the isCallerInRole method.C. The annotation @RunAs("AAA") can still be used for this application.D. All security roles can be mapped successfully to individual users in the realm.Answer: C,DExplanation:Not A, not C: A security role reference defines a mapping between the name of a role that is called from a web component using isUserInRole(String role) and the name of a security role that has been defined for the application. If no security-role-ref element is declared in a deployment descriptor andthe isUserInRole method is called, the container defaults to checking the provided role name against the list of all security roles defined for the web application. Using the default method instead of using the security-role-ref element limits your flexibility to change role names in an application without also recompiling the servlet making the call.For example, to map the security role reference cust to the security role with role namebankCustomer, the syntax would be:<servlet><security-role-ref><role-name>cust</role-name>
<role-link>bankCustomer</role-link></security-role-ref></servlet>Note:*A realm is a security policy domain defined for a web or application server. A realm contains acollection of users, who may or may not be assigned to a group.*The protected resources on a server can be partitioned into a set of protection spaces, each withits own authentication scheme and/or authorization database containing a collection of users andgroups. A realm is a complete database of users and groups identified as valid users of one ormore applications and controlled by the same authentication policy.*In some applications, authorized users are assigned to roles. In this situation, the role assigned tothe user in the application must be mapped to a principal or group defined on the applicationserver.*A role is an abstract name for the permission to access a particular set of resources in anapplication. A role can be compared to a key that can open a lock. Many people might have acopy of the key. The lock doesn't care who you are, only that you have the right key.Reference:The Java EE 6 Tutorial,Declaring and Linking Role References
