NEW QUESTION: 1The MOST important difference between hashing and encryption is that hashing:A. output is the same length as the original message.B. is irreversible.C. is concerned with integrity and security.D. is the same at the sending and receiving end.Answer: B
Explanation:Explanation/Reference:Explanation:Hashing works one way; by applying a hashing algorithm to a message, a message hash/digest is created.If the same hashing algorithm is applied to the message digest, it will not result in the original message. As such, hashing is irreversible, while encryption is reversible. This is the basic difference between hashing and encryption. Hashing creates an output that is smaller than the original message, and encryption creates an output of the same length as the original message. Hashing is used to verify the integrity of the message and does not address security. The same hashing algorithm is used at the sending and receiving ends to generate and verify the message hash/digest. Encryption will not necessarily use the same algorithm at the sending and receiving end to encrypt and decrypt.

NEW QUESTION: 2Which of the following is a step in deploying a WPA2-Enterprise wireless network?A. Install a DHCP server on the authentication serverB. Install a digital certificate on the authentication serverC. Install an encryption key on the authentication serverD. Install a token on the authentication serverAnswer: B
Explanation:When setting up a wireless network, you'll find two very different modes of Wi-Fi Protected Access (WPA) security, w hich apply to both the WPA and WPA2 versions.The easiest to setup is the Personal mode, technically called the Pre-Shared Key (PSK) mode. It doesn't require anything beyond the wireless router or access points (APs) and uses a single passphrase or password for all users/devices.The other is the Enterprise mode -which should be used by businesses and organizations-and is also known as theRADIUS, 802.1X, 802.11i, or EAP mode. It provides better security and key management, and supports other enterprise-type functionality, such as VLANs and NAP. However, it requires an external authentication server, called aRemote Authentication Dial In User Service (RADIUS) server to handle the 802.1X authentication of users.To help you better understand the process of setting up WPA/WPA2-Enterprise and 802.1X, here's the basic overall steps:Choose, install, and configure a RADIUS server, or use a hosted service.Create a certificate authority (CA), so you can issue and install a digital certificate onto the RADIUS server, which may be done as a part of the RADIUS server installation and configuration. Alternatively, you could purchase a digital certificate from a public CA, such as GoDaddy or Verisign, so you don't have to install the server certificate on all the clients. If using EAP-TLS, you'd also create digital certificates for each end-user. On the server, populate the RADIUS client database with the IP address and shared secret for each AP. On the server, populate user data with usernames and passwords for each end-user. On each AP, configure the security for WPA/WPA2-Enterprise and input the RADIUS server IP address and the shared secret you created for that particular AP. On each Wi-Fi computer and device, configure the security for WPA/WPA2-Enterprise and set the 802.1X authentication settings.

Incorrect Answers: A. A token is not required on the authentication server when configuring WPA-Enterprise. B. DHCP (Dynamic Host Configuration Protocol) does not have to be installed on the authentication server. You don't have to use DHCP at all although it is easier if you do. However, DHCP is usually configured on a dedicated device, not on the authentication server. C. You don't install an encryption key on the authentication server when configuring WPA-Enterprise. You install a digital certificate. The private key of the certificate is then used to create secure connections.
