NEW QUESTION: 1 You are deploying an application. Which two are common processes for all three staging modes? (Choose two.)
A. The administration server executes the deployment process on all targeted servers.
B. The administration server copies all the files to each of the targeted servers.
C. The administration server executes the unarchive process in each of the targeted servers.
D. The target server receives the deployment command, performs its internal preparation of the deployment, and performs the actual deployment.
E. The administration server copies all the files to the appdeploy directory for the targeted servers.
Answer: A,C
Explanation: Explanation Note: WebLogic Server provides three different options for staging files: stage mode, nostage mode, and external_stage mode. * In stage mode, the Administration Server copies the deployment files from their original location on the Administration Server machine to the staging directories of each target server. * In nostage mode, the Administration Server does not copy the archive files from their source location. Instead, each target server must access the archive files from a single source directory for deployment. The staging directory of target servers is ignored for nostage deployments. * External_stage mode is similar to stage mode, in that target servers deploy using local copies of the deployment files. However, the Administration Server does not automatically copy the deployment files to targeted servers in external_stage mode; instead, you must copy the files to the staging directory of each target server before deployment.
